B. BREVE RESUMEN DEL CURRICULUM

I was graduated in Psychology in the U. Complutense of Madrid (1974). PhD in the University of La Laguna (1978). Associate Professor in U. Santiago de Compostela (1981-82). Full Professor of Psychology of Language in the U. of La Laguna (since 1982) and Director of the Instituto Universitario de Neurociencia, IUNE (since 2016). Postdoc visitor in the US (Harvard, Illinois, Oregon, Wisconsin, and Memphis), Italy (Padova, Roma and Bologna), Germany (Saarbrücken, Dresden, and Freiburg), France (Paris and CNRS), United Kingdom (Sussex and York), the Netherlands (Max Plank Institute), Cuba (Centro de Neurociencia), Argentina (Instituto Neurología Cognitiva), Chile (Concepcion) and China (Dalian). My main research lines analyze the neurophysiology and neuroanatomy of linguistic meaning. Specifically, I am interested in how the brain reuses neural networks of action, inhibition, visuo-spatial perception and emotion to understand language. I published more than 80 scientific articles, most of them in international journals, and wrote or edited 6 books. I have been President of the Sociedad Española de Psicología Experimental (SEPEX), and member of scientific committees in the Society of Text and Discourse, the European Society of Cognitive Psychology, and several European Workshops of Imagery and Cognition. I am Associate Editor of the journal Frontiers in Psychology, and I have been Principal researcher of 13 competitive projects, funded by Spanish state agencies (9), by the Gobierno de Canarias (2) and by a private foundation (1). Also I have been member of a European project in the Human Capital and Mobility framework with other 4 European universities, and member of two Thematic National Networks on Cognitive Neuroscience, with other 10 Spanish universities. I received the 2015 Award of Research of the U. of La Laguna and I was awarded with 6 research "sexenios" (the maximum number allowed by the Spanish ministries) as a recognition to my continuous research effort.
